Creating an Innovative Biopharma Leader with Global Reach and Scale

Bristol-Myers Squibb to acquire Celgene, bringing together two highly complementary companies with a shared focus on one mission—to discover, develop, and deliver innovative medicines for patients with serious diseases.

Today, Celgene announced it will combine with Bristol-Myers Squibb, creating an innovative global biopharma leader. You can read the full announcement in the press release here.

This combination will enable Celgene to create greater impact for the patients who rely on our therapies, opportunities for our people, and value for our shareholders. Together with Bristol-Myers Squibb, Celgene will have leading franchises and a deep and broad pipeline—driving sustainable growth and delivering new options for patients with cancer, inflammatory and immunologic disease and cardiovascular disease.

What does that all mean? In short: we will be able to help more patients and explore new opportunities as part of an even stronger innovative biopharma leader.

“For more than 30 years, Celgene’s commitment to leading innovation has allowed us to deliver life-changing treatments to patients in areas of high unmet need. Combining with Bristol-Myers Squibb, we are delivering immediate and substantial value to Celgene shareholders and providing them meaningful participation in the long-term growth opportunities created by the combined company,” said Mark Alles, Celgene’s Chief Executive Officer.

Together we’ll have a broad portfolio of leading in-line products, and an expanded pipeline of early stage programs and near-term product launches to build a sustainable platform for future growth.

The combined company will have nine marketed products with more than $1 billion in annual sales, enabling us to create:

Leading oncology franchises in both solid tumors and hematologic malignancies led by OPDIVO and YERVOY as well as REVLIMID and POMALYST;

· A top five immunology/inflammation franchise led by ORENCIA and OTEZLA; and

· The #1 cardiovascular franchise led by ELIQUIS.

In addition to six expected near-term product launches (representing greater than $15 billion in revenue potential), the combined company will have a deep and diverse early and mid-stage pipeline across solid tumors and hematologic malignancies, immunology and inflammation, cardiovascular disease and fibrotic disease leveraging combined strengths in innovation.

The early-stage pipeline includes 50 high potential programs, many with important data readouts in the near-term.

Together, we'll also further our cutting-edge technologies and discovery platforms to sustain innovation leadership over time.

For example, combining with Bristol-Myers Squibb will expand our innovation capabilities in small molecule design, biologics/synthetic biologics, protein degradation, antibody engineering and cell therapy.

Consistent with Celgene's long history of cultivating partnerships to benefit patients worldwide, the combined company will also have strong external partnerships with access to additional scientific platforms.

Today's announcement represents the right strategic step for Celgene to continue to secure our long-term future—and deliver on our purpose to change the course of human health through bold pursuits in science with a promise to always put patients first.

“Our employees should be incredibly proud of what we have accomplished together and excited for the opportunities ahead of us as we join with Bristol-Myers Squibb, where we can further advance our mission for patients,” continued Mr. Alles. “We look forward to working with the Bristol-Myers Squibb team as we bring our two companies together.”
