Friday 7 September 2012, London UK - LSE Announcement

Temporary Increase in Conversion Rate for the Human Genome Sciences 3.00% Convertible Senior Notes Due 2018

GlaxoSmithKline plc ("GSK") (LSE: GSK), announced today on behalf of its wholly owned subsidiary Human Genome Sciences Inc., ("HGS"), a temporary increase in the conversion rate applicable to its 3.00% Convertible Senior Notes due 2018 (CUSIP: 444903AN8) (the "notes"). As a result of this increase, any holders that convert notes on or after September 24, 2012 and at or before 5:00 pm, New York City time, October 23, 2012 (referred to as the "Increase Period") will receive conversion consideration based on a conversion rate of 87.1211 (rather than the otherwise applicable conversion rate of 75.0469).

The notes are not currently convertible and will not be convertible prior to commencement of the Increase Period. Following the Increase Period, the notes will be convertible only if the conditions to conversion contained in the indenture governing the notes are met (which may not occur before August 15, 2018). If the notes become convertible again at any time following expiration of the Increase Period, conversions at that time will not benefit from the temporarily increased conversion rate announced today.

Following GSK's acquisition of HGS' outstanding stock in a cash transaction, the notes have become convertible (at times at which the conditions to conversion of the notes are met) solely into cash. As a result, applying the temporarily increased conversion rate, any holders that convert notes during the Increase Period will receive $1,241.475675 in cash per $1,000 principal amount of notes converted.

$494,286,000 principal amount of the notes have been previously converted, and $214,000 principal amount of the notes remain outstanding.

The CUSIP number of the notes is 444903AN8.
