STRATUS SHOULD BE SOLD

May 23, 2016

Dear Fellow Stratus Stockholders:

I write to you as the largest stockholder of Stratus Properties Inc., having accumulated my Stratus shares on the open market over 15 years ago. I highlight this fact to remind you that the Stratus Board of Directors and the management of Stratus have been awarded over 95% of the Stratus shares they own as equity compensation over the years. Board and management filings with the SEC show that, collectively, the current board and management has invested less than $200,000 in open market purchases in our company since December 2002.

Stratus has been communicating with its stockholders about the board's and management's recent successes and the significant returns already realized from Stratus's five-year plan, of which there are now less than four years remaining. Stratus is principally speaking of gains that were realized on two small shopping centers developed on land at Circle C acquired over 20 years ago. As the company's largest stockholder, I welcome any such successes and returns. However, when you are considering if you will vote your Stratus shares at the upcoming annual meeting of stockholders to elect my nominees, David M. Dean and Michael Knapp, as directors of Stratus and vote for my stockholder proposal asking the board to engage a nationally recognized investment banking firm to explore the prompt sale of the company, I ask that you take into account the following information about Stratus's performance over the last ten years or so, and recall that Mr. Armstrong has been the Chief Executive Officer of Stratus since 1998. Also, as you likely know, the Austin metro area itself has been one of the best real estate markets in the country over the past 20 years. The performance of Stratus stock bears no resemblance to the increase in Austin land and real estate prices over the past 10 or so years.

At the end of 2005, Stratus owned land with entitlements for 5.5 million square feet of office and retail space at its Barton Creek, Lantana and Circle C properties. All of those properties are prime locations within ten miles from downtown Austin, Texas. Stratus also owned 919 high-end single-family finished lots and related entitlements as well as entitlements for 1,860 multifamily units. Most of the land was acquired between 1988 and 1992 by Freeport McMoRan, which spun the company out to its shareholders in 1992. In the view of many, this land assemblage was and still is some of the best developable land in Austin. Yet, as reported in its Form 10-Q for the first quarter of 2016, at March 31, 2016, Stratus had just 125 acres under development, 38 acres of multi-family development and 87 acres of commercial development. Consequently, at that date, Stratus had under development just over 7% of the total of 1,767 acres of land to which Stratus holds rights and was therefore allowing significant assets to lie fallow.

Since 2005, the office and retail space that could be built on Stratus's entitled office and retail land has been depleted down to 2.8 million square feet, or by approximately 50%. That depletion has occurred primarily in the form of undeveloped land sales, although a handful of properties were developed and subsequently sold by Stratus. Likewise, the inventory of completed single family lots and entitlements is down to 256 from 919 ten years ago. Stratus still owns its multifamily sites though it has yet to complete a project on those sites (256 units are now under construction).

Over the past ten years, Stratus has made roughly 10 undeveloped land sales that resulted in gross proceeds of approximately $50 million. Two of those sales accounted for approximately 74% of the total gross proceeds. Other than bulk lot sales negotiated and made pursuant to take-down agreements over ten years ago, residential lot sales have averaged less than 30 lots per year. I believe certain Stratus land sale transactions that occurred in 2011 and 2012 would objectively be described as distressed fire sales made at a time when Stratus had violated a loan covenant.

At the end of 2005, Stratus had total debt of $50 million and several attractive income properties that it had developed on its legacy land. Since the end of 2005, the company has sold completed income properties that it developed on legacy land for total proceeds of approximately $140 million. This capital was recycled principally to fund the development of Block 21, a $300 million hotel, condominium and entertainment property in downtown Austin, which has been the primary source of Stratus declining revenues over the past 3 years.

STRATUS SHOULD BE SOLD

The company dodged a bullet after overextending itself with Block 21, but not before selling stock and property in what I believe to be fire sale transactions. Instead of learning its lesson, the board and management is pursuing a brand new initiative of developing grocery-anchored shopping centers on land it does not own (e.g., The Oaks at Lakeway, an $80 million grocery store-anchored shopping center outside Austin) when Stratus filings and investor presentations indicate that it does not have sufficient capital to develop very attractive land it has owned for over 20 years. In fact, in my view, Stratus legacy land has been neglected, as can easily be seen by the successful and rapid development being executed by third parties on land that Stratus formerly owned and sold.

Today, the company's total debt has ballooned to approximately $275 million, virtually every asset is encumbered with debt, and there is significant recourse debt to the company, with interest rates of over 7% literally hundreds of basis points more than healthy REITs or even private developers pay. The board and management have stated that Stratus has low debt, but seem to forget that over 60% of its assets are land and development projects that don't yet produce income. I am genuinely concerned that Stratus is headed down the same path again, especially if market conditions are anything less than ideal, which I believe is the case right now.

A ten-year sources-and-uses of cash/capital analysis would show that the company has sold approximately half of its entitled office/retail land, 80% of its single lot inventory, $140 million of income property and increased its debt burden to $275 million from $50 million to purchase the Block 21 property and develop The Oaks at Lakeway. According to its SEC filings, excluding two properties placed into service and sold in 2006, the company has completed the development of only 141,000 square feet of office and retail space on its legacy entitlements during the past ten years. In the meantime, the company has never paid a dividend and its fully diluted share count has grown from 7.66 million to 8.09 million over the same ten-year period. Substantially all of this increase was comprised of equity grants or options to executive officers and current members of Stratus Board of Directors.

All of the company's assets are encumbered with more debt than Stratus has ever before carried. Moreover, any value accretion going forward will have to overcome expensed and capitalized overhead of between $8 million and $10 million per year.

Block 21 Performance Representations

As noted above and reflected in the company's 2015 income statement, Block 21 provided over 75% of the company's operating revenues in 2015 and comprised at least 35% of the company's assets. The company has aggressively touted in its recent press releases and proxy materials the performance of Block 21. Management cites selective supplementary financial reporting to make this case, but completely ignores several highly dilutive transactions precipitated by overextending Stratus financially to complete the project and remedy a loan covenant violation. Specifically, the company cites a year over year increase in Block 21's net asset value, and that its net investment in the property is only $8 million. In fact, there has been virtually no increase in the appraised value of the property, and the so called value creation was the result of buying out its 60% partner at discount to lender appraisals.

Stratus has provided almost no disclosure with respect to the Block 21 joint venture or its wind-down. Stratus provides no relevant segmented accounting on the sale of 159 condominium units while inside the joint venture or the allocation of profits and losses to the partners throughout the life of the joint venture. Nor has Stratus provided any information with respect to any deferred maintenance or capital expenditure requirements in place when it bought out its joint venture partner. In fact, the net operating income at Block 21 was down significantly in 2015 and far below the budget disclosed in the March 2015 investor presentation of the five-year plan. In its April 20, 2015 investor presentation, Stratus projected that annual net operating income for Block 21 of $17.4 million. In its January 11, 2016 press release announcing the refinancing of the property, Stratus disclosed that the trailing 12 month through September 30, 2015 was only $15.6 million. Block 21, like any hotel-anchored property, will be subject to highly variable cash flows. In my view, it is not, nor was ever, appropriate as a development or holding that constitutes more than a third of a leveraged micro-cap public company. In my view, not only has this adventure not advanced the development and harvest of our legacy land portfolio it has retarded the development and value realization of the assets.

Despite the fact that the hotel in Block 21 is operated by Starwood and the catering/bar operation at the entertainment venue is operated by a third party vendor, Stratus Form 10-K states that it employs an aggregate of 39 full-time employees, 75 part-time employees and several independent contracted professionals. Other than Block

Stratus's Strategy as Stated Ten Years Ago

In the 2005 annual report (March 28, 2006, closing share price $24.50) the Company stated:

Our overall strategy is to enhance the value of our Austin properties by securing and maintaining development entitlements and developing and building real estate projects on these properties for sale or investment, thereby increasing potential return from our core assets.

With this [2001] agreement, we completed the core entitlement process for Lantana, allowing for approximately 2.9 million square feet of potential office and retail development.

The Circle C settlement, effective August 15, 2002, firmly establishes municipal development regulations applicable to our Circle C properties for 30 years

In the 2006 annual report (March 28, 2007, share price $34.75) the Company stated:

Our strategic plan over the prior five years focused on protecting and improving our land use entitlements and utility capacity

With this phase of the plan complete, the Company is well-positioned to take full advantage of an improving Austin real estate market.

we believe it is in the best interests of our shareholders to explore all possible strategic alternatives, including a possible sale of the Company, to maximize shareholder value.

TEN YEARS LATER

William H. Armstrong, Chairman, President and CEO states in the March 15, 2016, earnings release (March 15, 2016, share price $22.40):

our financial results have significantly exceeded projected plan performance.

We have worked patiently over many years to secure valuable entitlements and utilities required for full build-out of our great assets.

I would like for Mr. Armstrong to tell you and me in exactly what respects Stratus' financial results have significantly exceeded projected plan performance. Looking at Stratus' Form 10-Q for the first quarter of 2016, I see that for the first quarter of 2016, Stratus' operating income was only $473 thousand and it had a loss from continuing operations of $1.683 million. For the first quarter of 2015, Stratus' operating income was $1.609 million and it had income from continuing operations of only $566 thousand. Looking at Stratus' 2015 Form 10-K, I see that, for 2015, the approximately $20.7 million gain from the sale of several properties meant that operating income increased by approximately $15.3 million over operating income in 2014, although, despite that gain, Stratus' income from continuing operations was down in 2015 to approximately $14.4 million from approximately $18.2 million in 2014. To my way of thinking, these period-over-period comparisons of financial results show Stratus' financial results going in the wrong direction.

The company's share price closed 2005 at $23.33, almost exactly where it is today, but only after a 40% increase in the stock price in the wake of my Schedule 13D filing describing the submission of my shareholder proposal and intent to nominate two directors and subsequent offer by Capretta Properties, Inc. to purchase Stratus' real property assets for $435 million, which offer was later increased to $460 million. Though the company has repeatedly referred to isolated examples of value creation, there has been a reduction in stockholders' equity from December 31, 2009 through the first quarter of 2016. During most of that time Stratus has been a highly levered land owner in one of the best markets in the country. Shouldn't we expect more? I believe a portion of this under performance can be attributed to capital allocations made by management and company directors and excessive overhead. Furthermore, I believe the company simply lacks the scale and expertise to succeed as a public company. The Company claims that its five-year plan announced in April 2015 will solve all of our ills and bring value to stockholders. To me, it is completely senseless to wait five years to realize value that could be realized today, especially considering the execution risk inherent in a highly leveraged land and development company.

Mr. Armstrong has had 18 years as Stratus CEO to produce better results and to provide cash returns and capital appreciation to the Stratus shareholders; only after I submitted my stockholder proposal and the Capretta offer was made have we seen any sustained upward movement in the stock price over the past nine years. Ask yourself whether you believe the board and Mr. Armstrong will pursue a course centered on providing returns and capital appreciation to you if Mr. Armstrong and Mr. Porter are re-elected as directors of your company or if their re-election will mean that Stratus will continue to be operated in the same manner that has produced no cash returns to stockholders and that has led, in my view, to an unacceptably low stock price over the past several years.

IT IS TIME FOR A CHANGE
