P&G's Director of Corporate Sustainable Development Speaks at Boston College Conference

19-Apr-2005

George D. Carpenter, Director, Corporate Sustainable Development for Procter & Gamble, spoke last week at a conference at Boston College's Center for Corporate Citizenship.

At the conference entitled "Mapping the Future of Corporate Citizenship," Mr. Carpenter presented P&G's holistic and inclusive concept of Sustainable Development. This concept combines social and economic development with environmental stewardship and offers the potential to unlock the gates to top-line business growth by creating new value for consumers and customers.

Procter & Gamble is focusing its sustainability efforts in two areas where it believes it can most effectively make a difference and involve all its businesses and regions: Water and health/hygiene.

"We have just completed a year of tremendous progress toward our vision that P&G can link business opportunity with corporate responsibility, a concept we call "corporate social opportunity," Mr. Carpenter wrote in his vision statement. "We believe we can build our businesses while contributing our part to help address some of the toughest global health and social issues."

Mr. Carpenter uses P&G's safe water work as a good example of how it is working toward this vision. He describes the safe water project as a:

- New business opportunity with the potential to reach millions of people who do not have access to safe water.

- New business model based on effective public-private partnerships with organizations such as USAID, Population Service International, CARE and The Johns Hopkins University to learn how to best provide P&G's safe water technology to people in countries such as Pakistan, Haiti and Uganda.

"We are only starting to turn our vision into reality," Mr. Carpenter writes. "But imagine a world where corporations, in partnership with civil society and government, can significantly deliver on the UN Millennium Development Goal of addressing the world's most critical health issues. This improvement in society will provide the foundation for sustainable growth.
