Portfolio Review

The TWSE Index held up quite well in April, sliding 1.7% to 6,065 points. The financial and non-technology sectors performed relatively well, gaining 9.4% and 5.6% respectively. However, the technology sector index tumbled almost 6% from last month. The market was anticipating that more PC-related sectors would be facing further negative sales momentum in the coming months, due to slower-than-expected PC demand.

After reaching the 18-month high of 6,484 points on April 24, the TWSE Index plummeted to 5,525 on May 7, losing 959 points or 14.8% in 11 trading days. We believe that this market correction was triggered by the weak U.S. stock market and the drought in Taiwan.

However, the current correction creates an opportunity to accumulate good-performing technology shares. The most encouraging reports came from TSMC this month. Well above analysts' expectations, in April the company reported a 45% year to year increase in shipments. Its second quarter of 2002 utilization rate will jump to 80%, a 13% increase compared with a 67% rate in the first quarter of 2002. In addition, the annual growth rate of exports turned positive (+1.7% year to year) in March after 15 consecutive monthly declines. The Fund's investment strategy remains the same as last month, continuing to focus on cyclical and outsourcing plays.
